I am not understanding why the object that i get as a result of this function is different in each time it is executed. function myFunction() { var a = document.getElementById("b").value; alert(a); } I get the same string as the input type="text" change every time i click the button. How can this be? A: Every time you click the button your script tag is being re-executed, if you want to use the value of the input, you have to pull it off of it. Try this: function myFunction() { var a = document.getElementById("b").value; alert(a); }
